The Exhibition shows 21 Muslim Women who gave up purdah on the eve of Independence and became partners in building a new India. The main body of their work spanned from 1947 until the end of the century and has remained largely invisible, unrecognized and unsung.

During and after independence many Muslim women joined the project of rebuilding India. They became writers, teachers, artists, scientists, lawyers, educators, political workers, trade unionists. A few became MP's, MLA's and some represented India internationally. The Pathbreakers Exhibition presents some of these women who were at the forefront of nationalist and feminist struggles through their work and their social engagements. They worked along with men during the most challenging times; inspired by the work of Gandhi, Nehru, and Azad. There were and are hundreds of such Muslim women across the country. Hence the idea of the Exhibition is also to break the stereotype of Muslim Women as victims of triple talaq, polygamy, burqa, halala. 2135 students from 27 schools and colleges visited the Pathbreakers Exhibition. 215 members of the public and many visitors to the Salar Jung Museum also saw the Exhibition.

Two Panel Discussions were organized each afternoon- from 11.30 am to 12.30 pm and 1.30 pm to 2.30 pm dealing with the themes of the contribution of the Muslim Women around and after Independence to the spheres of politics, education, social transformation, culture and literature and also about aspects of governance, harmony, culture, literature etc. in the history of Hyderabad. Two Present Muslim Woman Pathbreakers from Hyderabad viz. Syeda Falak (Karate Champion) and Syeda Salva Fatima (Pilot) interacted with and inspired the students.

Booklet with profiles of the women also launched on the occasion

The travelling exhibition of path-breaking Muslim women achievers of the 20th Century rolled into the city on Saturday.

Called 'Pathbreakers', the invitation for the event had the enigmatic photograph of Tyeba Khedive Jung who was born in 1873 in Hyderabad. Moving away from Hyderabad, she became the first woman from the city who received university education graduating from University of Madras in 1894. Tyeba Khedive Jung wrote Anwari Begum in 1905 and she even presided over the annual conference of Brahma Samaj.

"I stumbled upon the book Anwari Begum in my mother's library. Then I realised I have to do something to tell the story about Muslim women who came onto their own at a time when the stereotype was that of a conservative society with many problems," said Syeda Hameed of Muslim Women's Forum, the brain behind the exhibition. A small booklet with the profiles of the women was also launched on the occasion.

Defying stereotypes

The exhibition had a captive audience as students from the Telangana Minority Residential School students as well as students from other government schools trooped in to listen to the stories of women who defied stereotypes. "We want the children to be inspired by these women. It will give them confidence that even they can achieve anything they want. We are giving them books with stories of these women to inspire them," said A.K. Khan advisor on Minorities Welfare, Telangana Government.

One of the inspiring stories is that of Zehra Ali Yavar Jung who studied at Mahbubia Girls School and later started the Society for Clean Cities much before Swacch Bharat Abhiyaan.

"Hyderabad is a city of Hayat Bakshi Begum. It is a city of Mah Laqa Bai Chanda who donated Rs. 1 crore to the Nizam Sikander Jah for educating women. It is great to have this exhibition of these inspiring women in the city," said Oudesh Rani Bawa, who spoke about other women from the city who worked for women's emancipation.

The exhibition at Salar Jung Museum will continue till August 7 between 10 a.m. and 4.30 p.m.

'Pathbreakers', an initiative of Muslim women is taking the responsibility to tell the narratives of twentieth-century Muslim women who broke barriers and contributed to the project of building a new India. A five-day event featuring these women and more is set to open at the Salarjung Museum on August 3.

There will be many panel discussions featuring well-known female personalities from the city, who have made a name for themselves in their respective disciplines. The first panel will highlight the contribution of Muslim women such as Tennis player Sania Mirza, educationist Anees Khan, Karate champion Syeda Falak, pilot Saira Fatima, and boxer Nikhat Zareen. Dr Anand Raj Varma will throw some light on the landmarks of secularism which will be followed by an interaction with Syeda Falak.

History will also get a feature on the Day 2 of the event where a discussion will take place about the forgotten female reformers in pre-independence era. Women such as Fakrul Hajiya, Masooma Begum, and others who made political contributions will also be discussed at the session on day three. Educational reforms done by Tayyaba Begum and Sogra Humayun Mirza are also going to be one of the highlights in the following days.

Hyderabad: The five-day long exhibition, PathBreakers, aimed at youngsters to get connected with the women of substance from the past ended on Wednesday.

The programme that included daily panel discussion on various aspects of women empowerment was organized by Muslim Women's Forum, New Delhi, Confederation of Voluntary Associations (COVA) and TMREIS (Telangana Minorities Residential Educational Institutions Society).

The event was inaugurated on August 3 by A.K. Khan, Advisor to the Government of Telangana, while Dr. Syeda Hameed, former Member, Planning Commission and President of Muslim Women's Forum explained the concept, objectives and the efforts that went into the creation of this unique exhibition. Mr. Jayesh Ranjan, Secretary, IT, Government of Telangana released a special Booklet on The PathBreakers.

The exhibition displayed the sketches depicting the history of 21 women across the country. These women had not only broken the stereotypes but became an inspiration for the country. These women came out of their traditional life styles and took active part in the struggle for independence of the country. After the independence they became writers, teachers, artists, scientists, lawyers, educators, political workers and trade unionists. A few of them also became members of parliament and legislatures while other represented India in international forum, the conference was told. "It's high time to break the stereotype of Muslim Women as victims of triple talaq, polygamy, burqa, halala," Mazher Hussain, Executive Director of COVA, said.

The exhibition had attracted more than 2000 students, 300 visitors and students from 25 schools. Two panel discussions were organized—one each in the forenoon and afternoon.

Syeda Falak (Karate Champion), Syeda Salva Fatima (Pilot) and Nikhat Zareen (boxing sensation) spoke about their hardships they faced in becoming achievers. Dr. Safia Mehdi from Delhi, Prof. Ismath Mehdi, Dr. Avdesh Rani, Dr. Ameena Tahseen, Prof. Salma Faruqui, Dr. Anand Raj Varma, Ms. K. Vimala, Mr. Veda Kumar, Dr. B.V Subba Rao and Ms. Dilnaz Baig spoke during the sessions.
